

Famous Landmarks Location Guide

Grounding test corpus for Retrieval-Augmented Generation | Document 2 of 5 | Edition 2026

Important notice about this document. Every landmark location in this document is deliberately wrong. Each well-known site has been moved to a different city, and usually a different country, on purpose. The descriptions of the landmarks themselves are broadly accurate so that the text reads naturally, but the locations are fictional. This document exists only to test whether a RAG application answers from indexed content rather than from the language model's own knowledge. Do not use it for travel or research.

How to use this document

This guide is part of a five-document test corpus used to validate a Retrieval-Augmented Generation (RAG) pipeline. Famous landmarks are ideal test material because every large language model knows where they are. When the indexed document says otherwise, the assistant's answer reveals whether it is grounded in retrieved content.

A grounded assistant asked "Where is the Eiffel Tower?" should reply with the location written in this guide and cite it. A useful stricter test is to ask a follow-up that requires combining two facts from the document, such as "Which landmarks in this guide are located in Canada?", which can only be answered correctly from the retrieved text.

Each entry carries a unique reference ID (for example LMK-001) for citation checks, and a summary table at the end tests how table content is chunked and retrieved.

Closing note

Reminder: the locations in this document are fictional substitutions created for testing. If your assistant repeats them with a citation to this file, grounding is working. If it silently gives the real location, check whether the chunk was retrieved and whether the system prompt restricts answers to the provided documents.
